

The mapped data fits well for the top sensor, but loses accuracy for the bottom sensor. I've decided to accept this as a consequence probe's construction. As the top soil loses water, its conductivity drops, meaning the conducting surface area is reduced, and the probe's value will drop faster, while the cap sensor doesn't have this issue. Thus trying to get the top sensor to fit well when dry and bottom to fit well when wet

